Acknowledgement

Action research is not possible without the cooperation and collaboration of many people and without team work. We would like to acknowledge the help we have received from individuals, groups and organizations in pursuing this research. We believe that the sharing of information and experience helps build knowledge; and knowledge helps action. The women leaders, their associates and the people they work with have been kind enough to contribute to this learning and knowledge building efforts.

We are grateful to the women and men who have participated in this research and contributed to the understanding and practice of social change/transformation and transformative leadership. The input shared in a generous, unassuming way by the women leaders and their associates for this research has supplemented society, in particular the development sector, in creating knowledge and disseminating the same. Power empowers when it is shared with others and these women and men have done so and we recognise the role they have played.

We are thankful to groups and organisations that have facilitated our interactions with a number of people for this research.

We are glad that Miserreor, Germany supported the Human Development and Research Centre (HDRC) to undertake this research. We consider it as a vital support towards social transformation and promoting transformative leadership in Gujarat and India.

We welcome the assistance given by the Vox Populi team in data collection for the research. We would like to acknowledge the valuable contribution of Dr. Catrinel Dunca from St. Xavier's College, Ahmedabad in the literature review as well as editing the document and Fahmida Hoque Meem in helping us categorise data and documents during the process of writing the research report.

A big thank you to Priyanka Christian of the Research and training unit of HDRC for visiting the organisations, contacting the leaders and for her work in data tabulation and analysis. We thank Sunita Mendonza of HDRC for her valuable support in coordinating the field visits, contacts with women leaders and data collection team. Thanks to Meenaxi Patelia of HDRC for Gujarati transcription to fine tune the data.

We are greatly obliged to our Research committee – Tara Sinha, Persis Ginwalla and Prasad Chacko (director of HDRC) for guiding the research at important intervals and challenging and supporting the entire process of this study.

Research efforts like this are not always possible without challenges, support and organisational backing. We are grateful to the Governing Board of St. Xavier's Nonformal Education Society under whose aegis HDRC works. Their counsel, challenge and support for research endeavours under the leadership of Prasad Chacko, the director of HDRC have made this research possible and worthwhile.

It has been a satisfying, challenging and learning experience to go through the entire research process with the support and help from all whom we acknowledge here and those whose names to not appear here and yet have contributed.

Once again 'આભાર', 'शुक्रिया', thank you, to one and all.

His academic studies include BA in Philosophy and Sociology, M.Sc. in Voluntary Organization from London School of Economics and Ph.D. in Sociology of Organisation on NGOs culture and effectiveness.

Larry Reinhard a Healthcare Consultant began his interest in public health from his time as an undergraduate at Stanford University where he cultivated a niche interest in the relationship between health and the environment it is provided, abetted by a technical aptitude achieved through a degree in Management Sciences and Engineering. During his time working in a healthcare setting, Larry acquired Lean Leader certification which provided the knowledge and expertise to develop means of improving the care management process and revise population health initiatives at several different healthcare systems across the nation. To begin his career in healthcare consulting Larry managed the implementation of a future state model for the utilization management workflow of a health system from the business innovation and process improvement team. Larry initially developed his interest in universal health in nations abroad during his time in Santiago, Chile, where he volunteered at a malnutrition clinic for infants and young children. He continued this passion during a year abroad as a William J. Clinton Fellow in India building a sanitation system module for urban slums in the Western state of Gujarat. Larry currently works as a Healthcare Consultant for PricewaterhouseCoopers in San Francisco.
